MOMENTARY SPLIT

Walking down exhibition street, we found ourselves apart of an event. Instead of following the footpath around the corner of the building footprint, the architecture revealed a pas-sageway and invited us to take that shortcut. A single point within a journey to the same destination, a momentary choice is given that splits the linear process into two options that ultimately doesn't change that original journey. The diagrams show this event is contained within the idea of the overall journey and highlights how this moment is introduced.

RE-IMAGINATION DESCRIPTION

The Event was Reimagined directly as a kitchen in a process of assembling a meal. Coming in as a single order, its split between the two assembly lines for individual items and is brought back together once completed. On either side of the assembly line a different work force works to complete the task, robots prepare the drinks, and the humans cook the burgers but in the end a single meal is produced.
